

Nothing to Spare for Schoolchildren

The following happened one September day in 2022, a few months before the Ninth Congress of the Korean Children's Union.

The respected Comrade Kim Jong Un summoned officials, and told them that duck-down padded overcoats and winter shoes should be made for the delegates to the congress as it would be held in winter.

He said that new uniforms had already been supplied to the delegates, and if they wore smart winter clothing, they would look so cute.

Duck down is well known for keeping out the cold, so duck-down padded clothes are recognized as high-grade ones.

The officials were moved by the loving care of Comrade Kim Jong Un who wanted to provide all the delegates with such clothes.

His instructions reflected his ennobling view on the rising generation.

Looking at the officials, he said that we should spare nothing for the good of children.

This was how the delegates came to Pyongyang wearing new uniforms and padded overcoats and carrying new bags.

The smart and presentable looks of KCU delegates lightened the atmosphere of Pyongyang in December as bright as in balmy spring, and looking at them, the citizens were firmly convinced that they would grow up as pillars supporting a thriving Korea under the loving care of the Party.
