

The Best Idea

One December day in 2016, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited a children's camp which had been renovated, despite the biting cold in winter.

Being led into a traditional dish dining room, he asked officials for what the room would be used.

When he was told that the children, who made traditional dishes during the cooking practice, would have meals in the room, he said it was not appropriate to separately lay out such a dining room at the children's camp.

The officials, who had been proud of having such a peculiar dining room, pondered on how to change the utility of the room.

Comrade Kim Jong Un said: It would be a good idea to turn the room into a library of cookbooks. Books on cookery can be displayed here, so that the cooks can read the books at leisure to improve their culinary skills and cook various kinds of dishes for young campers.

The officials realized that it was the best idea.

It was another meaningful lecture that taught the officials once again that there should be no slightest mistake in the work for the children.
