

An Outpost for Defending Socialism

One January day in 2014, when the whole country was stepping up the onward march of the new year, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the State Academy of Sciences.

That day, he paid attention to fully equipping the scientists with the revolutionary faith so as to train them into stubborn fighters who firmly believe in and follow only the Workers' Party of Korea.

He told the officials: The Party organization of the Academy should encourage the scientists to have a deep understanding of the immortal leadership exploits of President Kim Il Sung and Chairman Kim Jong Il, so that they can cherish a firm will to add brilliance to the great leaders' exploits with their successful scientific research results. In particular, it should make efforts to implant a firm revolutionary conviction in the scientists of the new generation. The scientific front is an outpost in today's battle for defending socialism.

It was not the first time for him to stress this; he used to say in a similar vein to the officials whenever he had an opportunity.

The word outpost reflects his wish that the scientists should stand in the vanguard of the struggle to build a powerful socialist country, always remembering the importance of their mission.

Listening to what he had to say, the officials could understand the intention of his visit to the State Academy of Sciences in the beginning of the new year.

Looking up to him who is encouraging them to have the faith and courage as the scientists of Juche Korea, the officials made up their mind to achieve brilliant successes in all fields of socialist construction by dint of science and technology.
