

A Policy Aspiring to New Things and Development

The Korean people vividly remember the teachings the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un gave at the construction site of Ragwon County Offshore Farm in July 2025.

That day he said: Many things have changed beyond recognition in just some months since its construction started in February. The current practical changes, not in words or letters, fully and visually show the ambitious plan, steadfast will and executive ability of our Party that is determined to powerfully promote regional development.

Going round the houses built in the fishermen's village area, he stressed: Our Party's policy on construction is a policy of constantly aspiring to new things and development, and there should be no absolute model or standard in its establishment and implementation. In order to make our construction work pioneer the future both in name and reality, we should make the most of the already accumulated potential for construction and, at the same time, actively aspire to the advanced ones and wage an uninterrupted struggle.

His remarks reflected his noble intention to transform the country into a paradise as soon as possible by ushering in a new era of gigantic transformation in every part of the country.

He is energetically leading the efforts to usher in a golden age of construction by providing new springboards for developing our architecture through his continuing speculations and their applications, cherishing an ennobling intention that all the structures for the people should be perfect.

Thanks to his world of great creation, monumental structures without parallel in the world are mushrooming one after another on this land.

The officials were convinced that more fascinating and eye-opening entities would continue to be built in different parts of the country under his wise leadership.
