

At Pyongyang Kim Jong Suk Textile Mill

The following happened one January day in 2016 when the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un looked round the bag canvas production line at the Pyongyang Kim Jong Suk Textile Mill.

The shop floor was filled with the rhythmic sound of flexible shaft looms weaving outer and lining canvas, the looms which Korean workers and scientists developed by themselves.

After looking carefully at the looms and feeling the canvas, Kim Jong Un said: It is really good that we can produce the canvas in this way. The general weaving workshop is committed to implementing the Party's policy.

He told his entourage that high commendations should be given to the officials, workers and scientists who, holding aloft the banner of self-reliance, rendered a substantial contribution to setting up the bag canvas production line.

He said with great satisfaction: The machines in the bag canvas production line are not so gleaming as imported equipment. Yet, they are valuable and precious as they were made by our own efforts. How good it is that we have set up the bag canvas production line by relying on our own strength and technology. Now we have laid a solid foundation for mass-producing bag canvas in our country.

Listening to him with deep emotion, the officials were firmly resolved to boost production by their own efforts and technologies, keeping in mind that self-reliance is the road of patriotism for opening up their future by themselves.
