

Warm Affection

In August 2015, the respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited the completed Pyongyang Old People's Home.

Feasting his eyes on the unique Korean-style building with gabled roofs, he said it looked like a work of fine art. Noting that he would carefully look round the interior and exterior of the home, though it might take him some time to do so, he made his way to the entrance.

Looking down at its dressed granite floor, he said that a mat should be laid so that the old people do not slip and fall.

The officials were surprised to hear that as they were fascinated only with its architectural beauty.

Everyone regarded the polished granite floor as excellent and beautiful one.

But Kim Jong Un, who always gives top priority to the people's convenience, worried that the old people might slip and fall the moment when he saw the granite floor.

The officials regretted as they failed to meet his noble outlook on the people. They had paid attention only to making the building flawless, out of their desire to give pleasure to him who was busy with all the state affairs.

They keenly realized again that no one in the world could rival the world of loving care of him who always prioritized the convenience and interests of the people.
