Setting a Fighting Goal

One day, respected Comrade Kim Jong Un visited an e-business institute built by a province itself.

The relevant officials explained the performance of computers and various programs.

While looking carefully at the computers used by the researchers, Comrade Kim Jong Un told the officials about the technical specifications, as well as their merits and demerits in developing programs.

The officials were impressed by his plain explanation.

Comrade Kim Jong Un said the institute should focus on developing programs and make itself a prosperous model for the whole country to follow.

Listening to his great trust and expectations, the officials made a firm pledge to stand in the vanguard of IT development in the country.